Ringing in the AI age across Telecom

AI and generative technologies have been creating significant waves in the technology world, transforming various industries and opening up new possibilities. These technologies leverage the power of machine learning and deep learning algorithms to generate content, simulate scenarios, and solve complex problems.

Unleashing the new digital Telecom Leadership Dialogue

AI and generative technologies are driving advancements in natural language processing and human-computer interaction. Chatbots and virtual assistants are becoming more sophisticated, capable of understanding and responding to human language with greater accuracy. AI is also seen as a platform that can harness the potential of 5G. While 5G increases the number of tele-phones per 100 population in most of the developed countries, Telecom connected the country in one decade end to end. Almost everybody connected from villages to towns, cities to metros.

Harihri Pani, Managing Client Partner, Telecom, India and South Asia, IBM Consulting set the context of the conversation by bringing to the fore how we see AI and its growing influence in the telecom industry. "Usage of AI, be it in the acquisition process or customer experiences or even fraud management, brings in a varied experience. Proof of concept is gaining momentum, telecom is virtually across all industries. Connectivity is bringing in a big difference across manufacturing units and supply chains. AI is helping optimize the experience and enabling companies to stay ahead of the curve."

Jignesh Karia, CTO-Telecom Cloud, India and South Asia at IBM pointed out that, "AI is going to help harness the true potential of 5G. The telecom sector can now extract useful business data and improve overall customer experience thanks to AI. Among other things, AI is used in the telecom sector for predictive maintenance, network optimization, anomaly detection, robotic process automation (RPA), and fraud detection. Data privacy is essential, and AI once more assists in enabling systems to recognize a violation, creating the appropriate knowledge is essential, despite the ongoing development of technology."

chinese learning (ML) can eliminate the need for guesswork and a host of manual processes across the industry. Additionally, AI and data analytics can guide telecom leaders in deciding what areas to focus on. For instance, how does one accurately assess demand in the current dynamic situation? Shalekh Kumar, Chief Data Scientist, Reliance Jio explained the rules of the game are changing. "Supply creates demand. This is an era of complexity across industries. We have hundreds and thousands of towers to deal with and a huge number of devices, customers, and locations. Dealing with all this complexity is a new challenge. The move, as a result, is from automation to intelligence to integration."
